Conditions in Lawrence During Recent Strike to Be Exposed.

Washington.—The senate has ordered printed as a public document a bitter arraignment of working conditions at Lawrence, Mass., in the form of an official report by the federal labor bureau agents who investigated the reason for last winter's textile strike.

The exact text of the report will not be made public until it comes from the printing office, but some of its features are a sweeping condemnation of the homes of employees furnished by the mill owners. It is estimated that the average wage given 31,000 employees during one week selected at random last year was $8.75, which was declared to be entirely insufficient for the support of a family. Child labor was a natural outgrowth, the report asserted, of such a condition, where the head of the family was forced to add to his income by securing work for his children.

The labor bureau's investigators found unsanitary, ill-ventilated and squalid living quarters furnished for the mill workers, many of them conducted under entirely inadequate building regulations.

Charlie Turner.

The sudden death of Charlie Turner, the 11-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Turner, after an illness of but a few days, has cast a gloom over the family and the new home that Mr. and Mrs. Turner are erecting on North Main street. The case is doubly sad because he was the only child and had been the subject of much thought and planning. He was taken suddenly ill Sunday and on Monday lost consciousness, dying shortly after 1 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

Charlie Turner was born in Huron, S. D., where he spent his school days until his parents moved to Ashland last January, coming here to escape the rigorous climate of the middle west. He was a bright boy, much loved by his playfellows, and during his short stay here had made many strong friendships. He was a good scholar in school and a boy of good behavior. Only last Saturday he was among his friends at the swimming pool, apparently as strong and healthy as ever. His passing away is much regretted by his many friends, while his bereaved parents have the sympathy of the entire community.

Mr. and Mrs. Turner came here about six months ago and purchased the Eubanks lot next to the Methodist church. A fine modern bungalow is being constructed on the lot, the plan of which included a special room for Charlie. This and other circumstances make the case a particularly sad one. Funeral services were of a private nature at the residence on Bush street, -r, H. S. Wilkinson of Eugene, a former pastor of the family, officiating.

A big traction engine with eight to ten wagons trailing behind it will be the novel scene on the road between Klamath Falls and the Bonanza district this summer.

A SPLENDID PROGRAM

Grants Pass People Swoop Down On Chautauqua and Please Large Crowd—Troubadours Pleased.

(By Henry G. Gilmore.)

The kindly spirit exhibited by the good citizens of Grants Pass in patronizing the twentieth annual assembly of the Southern Oregon Chautauqua Assembly in our city was fully appreciated by Ashlanders as one more link in the chain of that good-fellowship which should perpetually exist among the dwellers in our beautiful Rogue river country.

Grants Pass people left no stone unturned that socially and intellectually could render July 10, 1912, a red letter day in the 20 years' record of Chautauqua successes. A musical and literary entertainment participated in exclusively by the good people of Grants Pass was the order of Wednesday afternoon's attraction at the assembly hall at 2:30, and, all things considered, our visitors from the capital of Josephine county did nobly in the bill of fare offered on the occasion of their annual visit. A social both opened and closed the concert by overtures that were creditably performed by visiting instrumentalists, and the vocal and literary features were also well sustained. A ladies' quartet sang Hawley's "Song of the Season" and was encored, but it was in the double quartet of mixed voices in Lehnert's "Nightingale and Rose" that the best ensemble effects were produced by the visitors. The parts were well balanced and the voice production and phrasing generally such as to make it a musical and artistic contribution.

The participants were the Misses Nina Paddock, La Costa Mangum, Genevieve Pattilo, Millie Drake, and Messrs. L. L. Herrick, G. B. Cramer, A. E. Voorhes and Theo. P. Cramer, with Mrs. L. L. Herrick accompanist.

Mrs. W. Walker sang Dudley Buck's "When the Heart is Young" with an acceptance that secured her an encore, while, later in the program, Miss La Costa Mangum and Professor MacMurray gave a conscientious interpretation of Balfe's well-known duo, "Excelsior." This composition by no means ranks with Balfe's best work, and in the face of so much that is artistically beautiful and singable, singers have treated it, as it were, with studied indifference. Mendelssohn's "Concerto in G Minor" by Miss W. Hanagan and a brilliant number from the pen of St. Saens, the prolific French writer, played from memory by Miss B. Quinlan, with Miss Ethel C. Palmer at a second piano in both instances, were the two most ambitious numbers on the program. Both numbers called for Herculean strength, an unerring technique and the possession of very decided interpretative powers, without which there can be little or no music.

The "Clarinet Quartet" was hardly a musical success, and by reason of the fact that the presence of three clarinets in company with a single other instrument is too much of a muchness of one sort.

It remained for Miss Ethel C. Palmer to champion the good name of Grants Pass for piano playing. In Chopin's brilliant "Soherzo" she displayed, both technically and interpretatively, the highest powers. Miss Palmer has not only the gift for drawing a fine quality of tone from the piano, but her brilliancy, correct phrasing and finished style of execution appeals at once to the listener appreciative of the best there is in musical art.

Mrs. Gunnell, a professional teacher of elocution, gave three splendid recitations to appropriate piano accompaniments furnished by Miss Palmer. Mrs. Gunnell was vociferously applauded for her every effort and certainly contributed her quota to the artistic success of the Grants Pass visitation to Ashland.

Byron's Troubadours.

This clever and pleasure-giving company of performers took possession of the boards last evening and was greeted, perhaps, by the largest and most enthusiastic audience of the season. Before the performance proper, Professor MacMurray with two of his pupils, Miss La Costa Mangum (soprano) and Miss G. Pettilo (contralto), contributed several delightful numbers. Those by Professor MacMurray himself were a couple of songs, "At Nightfall," by Metcalf, and "Invictus," by Huhn. Professor MacMurray is well known in Ashland as the possessor of a musical and well-trained baritone voice, and capable of doing justice to many departments of vocal art. His rendition of these two songs was such as to secure him much applause, while the singing of both Miss Mangum and Miss Pettilo evidenced the fact that the essentials of enunciation of tone, correct breathing, enunciation and pronunciation, and an intelligent telling of the story, were points well drilled in the pupils' minds.

Regarding the Troubadours themselves, their performance last evening was of that varied and attractive character that combines the best there is in musical literature. The serenade style of music, colored somewhat with many of the best features of negro minstrelsy, would seem to characterize their performances. Judging from Wednesday's concert, visitors to our Chautauqua will have just cause to appreciate the coming of Byron's Troubadours to fill out the many musical and other attractions offered the public this season.

CAMORRISTS CONVICTED.

Wild Demonstration When Jury Reads Fatal Decision.

Viterbo, Italy.—All previous demonstrations were eclipsed when the jury which for more than a year has been listening to the evidence against the accused Camorristi gave its decision of guilty Monday afternoon. The prisoners, nine of whom practically were found guilty of murder and the remainder of having been accomplices in a blackmailing conspiracy, wept, cursed, and at times begged the court for mercy and at others denounced the jury as murderers and assassins of character.

Two of the accused cut their heads by butting them against the bars of their cage, and with blood streaming down their faces, they presented a fearful spectacle.

Demuns, one of the leaders, tried to cut his throat with a piece of broken glass he had concealed about his person. He inflicted a nasty gash that bled freely.

The uproar was so great that the jury was unable to complete the reading of its verdict and finally the sitting was suspended while the court prepared the sentence. The frenzied prisoners were removed to the jail, where they were locked in separate cells.

John Mitchell, the labor leader, addressed 1,800 people at La Grande on July 4, his subject being "The Ideals of Labor."
